As IUP celebrates its silver anniversary as a university, not all the changes have been big ones.

Nancy Noker was at the switchboard in Clark Hall the night Western Union brought the telegram announcing that Indiana State College was to become a university. While IUP and the world have changed drastically since that night in December, 1965, Noker's is still the first voice many callers hear.

In 1965, when the university was born, all incoming calls passed through Noker's switchboard. To imagine this now is to wonder if Alexander Graham Bell hadn't installed the switchboard personally. Noker answered the call, plugged it into the board, and rang the recipient by hand. In the dormitories, there were two telephones for every forty students—one house phone and one pay phone. Today, of course, there is a phone in every room.

The campus in 1965 was basically a small cluster of buildings around the Oak Grove. One of the buildings was Waller Gymnasium, which had two gyms and a swimming pool. All the basketball games were over. News releases were painstakingly produced on mimeograph machines. Much of the off-campus printing was done at a state prison. Not one but three Commencement programs each year were typeset on the clanking monster and printed by inmates.

Even if all the names in each Commencement program were added together, they would still total far fewer than the two thousand or so who now receive degrees from IUP each year. In 1965, scarcely more than five thousand students were enrolled. Of these, more than two thousand were in the School of Education; less than a thousand played there.

When the head basketball coach, Herm Sledzik, had a player with problems, it was easy to talk to the young man's professors: he knew them all. He also knew all the staff members and many of the students—for good reason. In addition to coaching basketball and baseball, Sledzik taught twelve sections of Health each semester with eighty students in each class.

In Walsh Hall, the faculty members of the math department were, in James Maple's words, "very close." The professors did a lot of things as a group, he said, like lunches and cookouts. In 1964, when Maple came to Indiana State College, the math faculty numbered seventeen. Seven years later, it numbered forty.

But by then, Maple had become one of three founding members of a new department: computer science. He had taught computer courses in the math department since 1964. Computers were going to bring change to every area of the campus.

One of those areas was the Office of Public Relations in Clark Hall, where Anita Hudson worked with Samuel Furgiuele. In 1965, Hudson used a clanking monster of a machine to typeset Faculty News. In order to justify each line, the line had to be typed twice. Each key stroke required maximum pressure.

Ordinary typing in Hudson's office was done on a manual typewriter. (Today, in the publications office, she has a personal computer.) Mild mistakes could be corrected by erasing. Bad mistakes required starting were in the School of Liberal Arts. An additional thousand or so students were in part-time or graduate programs.

The majority of those students were female, and their conduct was subject to the review of the dean of women, Nancy Newkerk. All kinds of behavioral rules existed, including one that forbade the wearing of shorts into "town." Like other administrators of the time, Newkerk remembers that her role was very much that of a generalist, with responsibilities in many of the areas that now come under the heading "student affairs." Today, Newkerk is associate dean of admissions.

The trend toward specialization is a nationwide one, Patricia Bell believes. Bell was—and is—a faculty member of the Department of Home Economics Education. As more faculty members have come into her department and others, Bell said, each has been able to become more of a specialist. In 1965, Bell and her colleagues had occupied the newly constructed Ackerman Hall for a little more than a year.

On the day IUP became a university, Herm Sledzik and his department were getting ready to move to their new building—Memorial Field House. During the next twenty-five years, the university mushroomed from thirty-seven buildings on 40 acres to seventy-two buildings on 204 acres. Manicuring lawns and flower gardens had to receive lower priority as the campus stretched south and westward.

Edward Receski wishes the whole campus today could look the way the "Oak Grove campus" did in 1965. Receski is vice president for administration, and the buildings and grounds are among his responsibilities. Twenty-five years ago, he worked in the university's housing office in the summer, coached football and did recruiting, and taught business courses at Blairsville High School.

As the number of buildings and acres has multiplied dramatically, the number of persons taking care of them has not. Resources are limited, and many of them have gone into areas deemed more important, like academics. From 46 bachelors' degree programs in 1965, the institution's academic offerings have expanded to 105 such programs today. There are forty-one masters' programs (up from fifteen in 1965) and six doctoral programs, none of which existed twenty-five years ago.

In the history department, to which Irwin Marcus came in the fall of 1965, the last quarter-century has seen new approaches to the study of a traditional subject. Social history perspectives, virtually unknown twenty-five years ago, have become commonplace; Marcus views this as a positive development. Oral history has joined written history as a research source, and the interview has become a legitimate research tool.

Marcus welcomes the growing ethnic and cultural diversity of faculty and students. Not only is the faculty now national and even international in background, but Marcus also feels it is more energetic, especially with regard to research and publication. In the computer science department, according to James Maple, about a third of the students are from other countries.

Nancy Noker welcomes what she calls "the liberation of the female student." Gone are clothing codes and the dormitory bed checks at eleven on weeknights and midnight on weekends. For his part, Maple and his colleagues in computer science puzzle over where the women themselves have gone. When the department was formed, about half the students were women. Their number has dropped dramatically, and no one knows for sure why.

Herm Sledzik welcomes what he sees as a decentralization of decision making that has occurred since 1965. With more people involved in making decisions, though, has come more time spent on committees, a phenomenon noted by both Patricia Bell and Irwin Marcus, who said that the university has grown not only in size but in complexity.

All eight of these people—who knew the university before it was a university—miss the sense of community, the personalization, the comfort of knowing everyone by name. That era is gone, and a more complex one has taken its place. As Stephen Vincent Benet wrote about post-Civil War America: "Say neither . . . 'It is . . . accursed,' nor 'It is blest,' but only 'It is here.'"

Old Visions and New Acclaim

Indiana University of Pennsylvania came into being in 1965, right in the midst of what might well be called higher education's most tumultuous decade. Enrollments were climbing, campuses were expanding, students were rebelling, long-time rules were being abolished, general education requirements were being questioned, and higher education's priorities were being shaped by the push for social justice.

Given the upheaval of this period, it is remarkable that IUP's transition from state college to university was able to proceed in an orderly fashion. Much of the credit for this achievement belongs to President Willis Pratt, whose visionary leadership laid the groundwork for the multipurpose, highly diverse university IUP was to become.

Twenty-five years after attaining university status, IUP is the fifth largest university in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the largest university in the State System of Higher Education, and the only one of fourteen SSHE institutions authorized to grant doctoral degrees. The university has gained a reputation for being a good academic institution. The fall issue of Money magazine's Money Guide: America's Best College Buys ranked IUP twenty-second in the nation among public colleges and universities and first in Pennsylvania. The ranking was based on the amount of time teachers actually spend teaching, on the quality of the students, and on the advantage of offering the largest internship program in the state—all combined with "a very reasonable price."

In addition to offering a high-quality education at a reasonable cost, IUP has an excellent extracurricular program, an attractive campus with a good physical plant maintained by a conscientious staff, and a growing reputation for initiating some very creative cost-saving programs.

Whereas at one time most IUP alumni were in the field of education, today its fifty-five thousand alumni occupy positions in corporations, business, government, and human service agencies, as well as in educational institutions throughout the country and the world.

The fact that throughout its history this institution has had to struggle financially makes its progress all the more remarkable. There has been virtually no period in which resources were sufficient to do the job the institution was capable of doing. Yet the commitment of many people, and the ethic woven into the fabric of the institution to do one's very best despite limited resources, allowed the institution to continue. Thanks to capable leadership at critical times and a dedicated faculty and staff, IUP has not only been able to remain stable but has been able to continue its march toward a brighter future.

There is much to be proud of as we celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the attainment of university status for IUP.

This year marks the seventy-fifth anniversary of the social Greek system's birth at IUP. Between 1914 and 1916, the college's sorority system, cooperatively represented by the Association of Education Sororities, was founded when the first three national charters were received. The first national fraternity charter came in 1930. Have things really changed? Well, sort of.

The social Greek system at IUP has experienced a slow evolution, in conjunction with ever-changing American society. While the concepts remain the same—fellowship with peers, associating with one another to grow—sororities' and fraternities' goals have changed, particularly in the last several decades.

Most prominent has been purpose, according to Terry Appolonia, assistant director of student activities and organizations. Social Greek organizations—fraternities and sororities alike—were initially viewed by faculty members as anti-intellectual distractions from academic discipline. They were a tool for socializing, particularly from the 1950s to the 1970s, when society lowered the age of majority from twenty-one to eighteen. Pledging and hazing, methods used to initiate and test new members, were considered acceptable.

Society swung from the conservative into the Age of Aquarius.

"The over-emphasis of the social aspect of fraternity life by the Greeks and the decreasing influence of the administration on student body behavior in general contributed to an emerging negative Greek stereotype still experienced today," Appolonia said. "People perceived fraternities and sororities as perhaps the most autonomous of all extracurricular student activities," Appolonia said. "Greek system activity seemed to deviate more from the university's goals more in this period than at any other time. Yet, this era also produced more philanthropic activity, campus and community visibility, and successful alumni than ever before."

Enter the eighties. According to Appolonia, a disciplined definition of the fraternity and sorority membership emerged, which has held firm into the nineties. Greek membership, no longer viewed as a social or undirected use of free time, is now considered a real opportunity. Pledging incorporates a progressive pledge education philosophy, and community and campus involvement is expected of the membership. National headquarters' offices and the university have begun addressing the longstanding concerns about alcohol abuse and hazing, and IUP organizations are making an effort to build a positive environment for student development and academic achievement.

"Society has come back to being more conservative," said Appolonia. "We are leaving the 'decade of materialism' behind, so Greek organizations have had to change, too."

But, if history repeats itself, one thing, Appolonia said, is certain: "Fraternities and sororities will survive the next seventy-five years if they remain attractive to students." 🐼

For decades, the Greeks and their floats have been mainstays of the Homecoming parade.

From Gloom to Glory

by Bob Fulton

The most remarkable team in the hundred-year history of IUP football was supposed to be one of the worst. But instead of gloom, there was only glory in 1917. Coach William Smith directed his depleted, unseasoned outfit to a national championship.

Indiana Normal School, as IUP was then known, finished 8-1 and outscored its overmatched opponents 623-7. Smith's team capped its season with a 40-0 victory over Kalamazoo State Normal School (present-day Western Michigan University) in the unofficial national normal school title game.

Such a feat would have been deemed impossible two months before, when optimism was as scarce as able-bodied players at INS. Once the United States entered World War I, many Indiana gridders joined the military, determined to battle on other fields where more than the honor of one's school was at stake. Smith, who signed up for the service after the season ended, no doubt felt like Old Mother Hubbard that September, his cupboard stripped bare.

"Never in the past ten years was the athletic outlook at Indiana quite so dark as when the institution opened its doors on September 11, 1917, for another year's work," noted the Normal Herald of October, 1917. "Out of a squad of half a hundred men who appeared for practice in the fall of 1916, very few returned to Normal this year...and on the opening days of school very few new men appeared."

Prognosticators declared that INS was destined for disaster, perhaps even a reversal of the previous season's 8-1 record. But the Normals shrugged off such dire predictions and reached unprecedented heights, reinforcing Smith's reputation as a winner. In four years as head coach (1914-17), the 1908 INS graduate led his teams to a 34-3-1 record and three state normal school crowns.

Indiana opened its championship season with a 104-0 rout of Clearfield High School at Normal Park, located where Fisher Auditorium and Stapleton Library now stand. INS annihilated Edinboro, 141-0, a week later in the most lopsided game in school history. The Normals then thrashed the Carlisle Indians (98-0), Bellefonte Academy (106-0), and the Amity Athletic Association (53-0) before suffering a setback at Forbes Field, where the Pitt Freshmen pulled out a 7-0 victory.

INS rebounded with three resounding wins: 40-0 over Mansfield in a game to determine the state normal school championship; 35-0 over the West Virginia Reserves; and 40-0 over Kalamazoo.

The newspapers of the time—Indiana was home to four of them—crowded over the exploits of the Normals, whom they likened to the Allied force battling Kaiser Wilhelm's German armies in Europe.

"Smith's warriors adopted tactics that would have made General [John] Pershing smile from ear to ear," the Indiana Gazette noted after INS stomped Clearfield. "If Kaiser Bill could have seen our warriors in action it is very evident that he would have thought his fighting machine resembled an afternoon tea party."

In a hundred years of great and not-so-great football teams, 1917 is still the greatest.

The obviously unpadded 1917 Normals captured the unofficial national normal school championship by whipping Kalamazoo Normal, 40-0. Lopsided victories were the norm in 1917. Indiana outscored its opponents 623-7.

Prognosticators declared that INS was destined for disaster, perhaps even a reversal of the previous season's 8-1 record.

Indiana's relentless attack was directed by quarterback Edmond Melican, a native of Worcester, Mass. Another key member of the offense was team captain Fred Putts, a 171-pound tackle (lilliputian by today's standards), who blasted gaping holes in enemy defenses with crunching blocks. Putts hailed from Indiana—Rensselaer, Ind., that is.

Other prominent contributors were running back Lester Redman of New Eagle in Washington County, who scored a team-leading fourteen touchdowns; DuBois's Ben Jones, who scored twelve; and Bernard Sandomire and William Kellogg, both Pittsburgh-area products, who added nine TDs apiece.

Jones enjoyed the most spectacular single-game performance, scoring five times in the win over Bellefonte at Johnstown's Point Stadium.

By that point in the season, INS had outscored its four victims 449-0. News of the Normals' success spread throughout the state—and beyond. Kalamazoo coach W. H. Spaulding—later the head man at UCLA, where one of his charges was future baseball Hall of Famer Jackie Robinson—took notice of this powerhouse from Pennsylvania.

After Indiana routinely dispatched Amity in the fifth game, Spaulding issued a challenge. Since Kalamazoo was acknowledged the best normal school team in the Midwest and Indiana was regarded as the best in the East, he suggested a match-up for the national championship. Kalamazoo was willing to travel the 350 miles to Indiana, Pa., an imposing journey in 1917.

"It would mean about five days' absence from

"ALTHOUGH THE VISITORS WERE SUPPOSED TO POSSESS 'OODLES' OF SPEED AND ALL KINDS OF
FANCY PLAYS, A GLANCE AT THE SCORE WILL SPEAK FOR ITSELF."

Snow was on the ground on November 20, 1917, when Indiana beat Kalamazoo. The game was played on the present site of Stapleton Library and Fisher Auditorium. The view is toward the north, with a grandstand in the background. Behind the grandstand is the tower of West Indiana School (also called Thaddeus Stevens) on Washington Street. The back portion of the school survives today as Uhler Hall.

The cheerleaders, whose names are not known Perhaps a reader can offer identifications

classes," Spaulding told the Kalamazoo Gazette, "but it would be a big advertisement for the schools. We can make a great showing, despite the fact that the Pennsylvania Normal [INS] turns out some wonderful teams."

The visitors arrived in Indiana with a 4-2 record. Spaulding's team had walloped the Notre Dame Freshmen 84-0, defeated Michigan Agricultural College (now Michigan State) by a 14-0 score, and nearly upset the University of Michigan, losing 17-13. Kalamazoo's most fearsome weapon was halfback Sam Dunlap, reputed to be "the greatest open-field runner in the state of Michigan."

The Normals knew they were facing a formidable challenge.

"Reports from the west have thrown a little scare into the local camp and the result is that Indiana has overlooked no opportunity to prepare for the greatest battle of the year," noted the Indiana Gazette. "Messrs. Putts and Co. have been working like beavers in preparing for this game."

All that extra effort brought huge dividends. Indiana dented the Kalamazoo goal line six times, with Jones scoring three touchdowns, and John Haley adding two, and Redman contributing his fourteenth of the season. The visitors never even threatened on offense.

The contest to decide the title became a noncontest.

"Kalamazoo Normal, heralded as the greatest normal school aggregation ever produced, came to town thoroughly convinced that they were going to have things very much their own way," noted the Indiana Gazette.

Coach William Smith '08 led Indiana football teams to a 34-3-1 record between 1914 and 1917. Smith went into the service after the championship season of 1917.

Indiana's four newspapers of the time crowed over the exploits of the Normals, who were likened to the Allied force battling Kaiser Wilhelm's German armies in Europe.

"Although the visitors were supposed to possess 'oodles' of speed and all kinds of fancy plays, a glance at the score [40-0] will speak for itself."

The Normals lashed Kalamazoo and also, in a sense, those who had predicted a dismal season. The prognosticators had obviously gazed into a defective crystal ball. For there was no gloom in the fall of 1917; there was only glory. 🍁

Swing Out!

In conjunction with the year-long celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of university status, a reprise of portions of past Swing Outs is being planned. Bob Ensley is trying to reach all former performers, but it's a big job—and an expensive one. If you haven't heard from Bob and would be interested in being part of this historic event on June 15, 1991 (Alumni Weekend), please write to Bob's attention at the following address: Institutional Advancement, IUP, 301 John Sutton Hall, Indiana, PA 15705.

Amplifications

Jim Saunders '63 saw the article on Joseph Griffith '76 in the Winter-Spring issue and wrote to let IUP Magazine know that there are at least five IUP alumni among winners of the Presidential Awards for Excellence in Science and Mathematics Teaching. A teacher at Upper St. Clair (Pa.) High School, Jim won the award in Pennsylvania for mathematics in 1988. His wife, Liz Roberts Saunders, is a member of the Class of 1964, and his son, Bill, belongs to the IUP Class of 1991.

The article about Michael Primak ("A Different Kind of TV Star") that appeared in the Summer issue of IUP Magazine was written by Diana Blackwell.

20s

In a letter to IUP Magazine, Mildred Yost Beute '22 reported that she lives in Grand Rapids, Mich., and that she would like to see more news from classmates of the '20s.

Retired from nineteen years from the Greensburg-Salem School District, Helen Kelly '27 lives in Greensburg.

A consultant for the Education Cooperative, Walter Patterson '28 lives in Needham, Mass., with his wife, June Logan Patterson '27.

30s

Last fall, a group of IUP alumni traveled together for a "Romance of the Danube" tour through Turkey, Romania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and West Germany. The group included James Kohut '37 and his wife, Helen, of Ligomer, Corinne Carson Wilmoth '50 of Indiana, and Phyllis Hoffman Rohland '54 and her husband, John, of Lebanon, Pa.

50s

Semi-retired for the past four years, Marilyn Detweller Penney '50 lives in Uniontown. She has had some health problems but is looking forward to traveling to Seattle to visit her first grandchild.

Retired from Bethlehem Steel after serving thirty-five years as customer service manager, John Dean '52, M'73, lives in Ebensburg with his wife, Virginia. Two of his five children graduated from IUP.

The May, 1990, issue of Shaker, the community news magazine of Shaker Heights, Ohio, published two separate articles about John Vargo '52, M'63, and Bill Jarvie '57. John, an English teacher, participated in an exchange with a professor from John Carroll University for the 1989-90 school year. He lives in Shaker Heights with his wife, Diana Surra Vargo '61. Bill retired as assistant principal from the Shaker Heights Middle School. He lives in Chesterland with his wife, Jan.

John Harwick '54, M'60, D'90 is a new assistant communications professor at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks.

Phi Delta Kappa, the national honorary education fraternity, has named Jim Daniels '55 Man of the Year. He lives in North Palm Beach, Fla.

Vice president for academic affairs at California University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Nancy Zebrasky Nelson '57, '60, received the Phi Delta Kappa Distinguished Research, Leadership, and Service Award.

Dr. William Snyder '58 was honored this year as the Pennsylvania state finalist for National Superintendent of the Year. The superintendent of the Central York School District, he also was recognized as a 1990 Executive Educator 100, an annual award given to a hundred school executives who make outstanding contributions to kindergarten through twelfth grade education. William lives in York with his wife, Patricia Miller Snyder '58.

After a solo exhibition in the Trenton, N.J., City Museum in September, Joy Heibling Barth '59 is participating in an art exchange with the Soviet Union. She lives in Belle Meade, N.J.

Twenty-five alumni gathered last fall at the Heidelberg, Germany, home of Maj. Gen. Joseph Laposata '59 and his wife, Anita Sabo Laposata '60. The group consisted of alumni from the classes of 1958 to 1989, many of whom are in the U.S. Army or are in civilian positions in the Army.

60s

The former director of marketing and special projects for Electronic Industries Foundation, James Geletka '61 has been elected executive director and trustee of the ADAPSO Foundation. The foundation facilitates the development of computer-related products and services to aid people with disabilities. He lives in North Potomac, Md., with his wife, Janice.

A scholarship at Cornell University has been established in honor of Wedding reunion: When Nicola Pribish Konyk '79 married her husband, John, last April, the wedding turned into a true IUP reunion. Twenty-one IUP alumni attended the event, and three alumnae—Annette Pribish '84, Julie Lasto '79, and Diane Paulitsky '79—were bridesmaids. Special guests included a group whose friendship dates to their freshman year in 1975. They are from left (front row) Roberta Wright Savage '79, Althea McTighe Page '79, Mary Ann Santel Kohler '79, (back row) Nikki Pribish Konyk, Donna Hammer Brenner '79, Joyce Medie Yoverich '79, Dale McClelland '79, and Pat Sorrell Pajak '80. Nikki and John are residing in Pittsburgh.

Bucs coterie: At the Pirates home opener in April, several IUP grads were invited by IUP Council of Trustee member Kim Lytle '72, M'74, to enjoy the game from the First Seneca Bank box at Three Rivers Stadium. From left are James Pileggi '73, Brian Matthews '84 (foreground), Tim Pulte '85, Vito DonGiovanni '72, M'74, D'88, Lawrence Claus '67, Kathleen Lambert Mack '79, Kim Lytle, Council of Trustees Chairperson Patrick Stapleton '49, and Pittsburgh City Council President Jack Wagner '74.

Gregg Caldwell '62, a chemistry teacher at Fox Chapel High School in Pittsburgh. Cornell established a scholarship program to honor its graduating students and their favorite high school teachers. One of Caldwell's former students, a recent Cornell graduate, arranged to have a scholarship set up in his name to thank him for his contribution to her education.

Chairperson of the home economics department at Allegany, N.Y., Central High School. Lois Lankard Smith '63 earned her master's degree from St. Bonaventure University in May. She lives in Allegany with her four daughters.

Dr. Nancy Swazuk Herron '64 has been named an administrative fellow at Penn State University for the 1990-91 academic year. The administrative fellows program is designed to enhance the qualifications of women and minorities by involving them in mentorship experience with high-level administrators at the university. Nancy is head librarian at Penn State's McKeesport campus and lives in Murrysville with her husband, Eugene.

In September, William Beck '65, who is dean of library services at California University of Pennsylvania, served as a delegate to the Governor's Conference on Library and Information Services in Harrisburg.

Dan Rothermel '65, a teacher in the Philadelphia Public Schools, is also conductor of Savoy Company, the oldest Gilbert and Sullivan troupe in the United States. The troupe recently performed at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia.

A teacher in the Jefferson County Schools, Victoria Antonacci '66, who lives in Wrens, Ga., spent the summer in Australia visiting friends and touring. She has been accepted into the Ph.D. program at the University of Central Florida in Orlando.

A pre-kindergarten teacher in the Norfolk School District, Carol Summers Cain '66 earned her master's degree in early childhood education from Old Dominion University last December. She and her husband, Jack, live in Virginia Beach.

In August, Lillian Muharsky Griffith '66 began a new position as child abuse caseworker for Butler County (Pa.) Child and Youth Services. Vice president of the Kams City Area School Board, Lillian lives in Kams City with her husband, David, and children, fifteen-year-old Brian and ten-year-old Erin.

Mary Lynn Haladay Kasunic '68 has been promoted to executive director of the Area Agency on Aging in the Phoenix, Ariz., region.

Promoted to lieutenant colonel in the Army Reserves, David Bochna '69 has been appointed commander of the 485th Chemical Battalion in Johnstown. An elementary school teacher in the Greater Latrobe School District, he lives in Latrobe with his wife, Marianne Rossi Bochna '70.

Retired from teaching in the Greater Johnstown School District, Gary Beuke '69 is president of the Serra Club of Cambria County, an international Catholic organization that fosters vocations to the priesthood and religious life. Gary is past president of the Greater Johnstown IUP alumni chapter and is now serving on the chapter's Board of Directors.

The new assistant superintendent of the Red Lion School Area School District in York County, Steve Iovino '69 lives in Lititz with his wife, Judith Betz Iovino '68, who teaches in the Warwick School District.

Cmdr. Anthony Schneider '69 retired from the U.S. Navy last March and has started a new career as a financial consultant with Merrill Lynch. He and his wife, Barbara Yanichko Schneider '69, and their family have moved to Orlando, Fla.

70s

While her daughter, Amy, has begun her freshman year at IUP, Elaine Foreman Cenknier '70 has begun a new job as food services director for the Thomaston School District. She lives in Union, Maine.

Bronze family: York, Pa., residents who love to shop are familiar with the people standing behind Peter Calaboyias M'69. They are members of the family that never leaves the Galleria Mall. A Family Shopping was created by Calaboyias at the request of the mall's owner, George Zamas of Johnstown. "Since people don't get to museums often, this is a way they can still see current art in places they frequent," Calaboyias said. The bronze sculpture in the Galleria is not the first Calaboyias has completed for Zamas; he has also created sculpture for malls in Beckley, West Virginia, and Oil City, Pennsylvania. In addition to having pieces permanently placed in a variety of traditional locations, Calaboyias created the sculpture in front of IUP's Sally B. Johnson Hall, titled Atticescape. An art professor at Community College of Allegheny County, he lives in Pittsburgh.

Retired Faculty Spotlight

by S. Trevor Hadley '37

The Retired Faculty Spotlight is on Morrison Brown.

Morrison was born in Markelsville, Pa., and spent twenty-one years on the Indiana faculty. He first was granted a two-year Normal School Diploma in 1931 at what was then Shippensburg State Teachers College. At the ripe age of seventeen, Morrison began his teaching career in a one-room country school in Perry County, Pa. After two years he returned to Shippensburg and earned his bachelor's degree in education with certifications in English, mathematics, and elementary education.

Morrison was granted an M.A. degree in 1941 in English at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1954, he earned a Ph.D. in English from the Pennsylvania State University.

Morrison had a highly varied teaching career. After his first two years in a one-room Perry County school, he worked at the first consolidated elementary school in the same county, where he also served as an elementary school principal for six years. Later, he taught English for six years at the Carson Long Institute and for four years at Slippery Rock, before coming to Indiana in 1953.

During Morrison's twenty-one years at Indiana, he taught a scattering of English courses and then gradually became the unofficial director of English Education. As the English department grew at Indiana, he taught fewer and fewer courses and finally specialized in the English methods course and was responsible for all English student teachers. He directly supervised student teachers all over Western Pennsylvania.

Morrison's wife, Gladys Brown, is also a retired elementary school teacher. Gladys taught for twenty-five years, twenty of which included supervising elementary student teachers from IUP.

Morrison and Gladys have two daughters: Barbara Hillje, a former teacher and now an attorney in Bucks County, Pa., and Linda McNaughton, a former teacher and the mother of Morrison and Gladys's two grandchildren.

Morrison says that he has "fond memories of many staff members of the English department at Indiana and especially those deeply concerned with creating and maintaining a productive student teaching environment." He also fondly remembers countless secondary school supervisors who worked conscientiously to develop young English majors into fine teachers.

The one adjective most frequently used by retired faculty about their memories of Indiana and their careers there is the word "commitment."

Morrison remembers with great pleasure the staff parties, especially at Christmastime, and the faculty dinners with Ma Folger's French-fried eggplant.

Morrison is the author of a book, Louis Bromfield and His Books, published in 1957 in England and later reissued by an American subsidiary of Oxford University Press.

Since his retirement in 1974, Morrison has devoted much of his time to the two farms he owns in Perry County. Although the land has been actively farmed by others, the farms have permitted Morrison to follow his central hobby of grafting and growing trees, particularly black walnuts, filberts, chestnuts, English walnuts, and hickory nuts. He has also been an active experimenter with raised bed gardening.

Morrison and Gladys have traveled widely in the U.S. and in Europe and to several scattered islands. They still make their home at 119 South Third Street in Indiana and would enjoy hearing from former colleagues and students.

After earning her M.B.A. from the University of Maryland, Carolyn Piler '83 was promoted to manager of marketing strategy and development for Manor Healthcare Corporation. She lives in Silver Spring, Md.

Registered nurse Karen Kerner Sabol '83 works for both South Hills Cardiovascular Specialists and Mercy Hospital's coronary care unit. She and her husband, Joseph, live in Penn Hills, Pa.

Last year, Linda Harkulich Skarica '83 and her husband, Michael, built a new home in West Middlesex, Pa. They own and operate Team Logos,

During the summer of 1990, many new developments occurred in the alumni office. In August, we received our first check from our credit card program in the amount of $3,600. Thanks to your overwhelming acceptance and enthusiasm for this service, the Alumni Association is now in a position to cosponsor one semester's tuition for students whose names were randomly drawn at each of this year's five home football games. The reason for this activity is to promote student attendance at the football games. The effort has been very successful and one which we are able to support, thanks to those of you who have chosen the IUP credit card. Each time you make a purchase using the card, the Alumni Association receives a quarter. If you would like to have an IUP MasterCard, please call (800) 847-7378, ext. 2500, any time of the day or night, and a bank representative will be at your service.

Speaking of 800 numbers, we now have an 800 number which you may use to talk with anyone in the alumni office. If you plan to move and would like to give us your new address, please dial (800) 937-2487. If you have as much trouble remembering telephone numbers as I, just remember (800) "YES 2 IUP," which is the acronym for 937-2487. Another occasion on which you might want to use the 800 number is to hear a two-minute recording of the highlights of football games as well as the final score. This past season, many alumni and friends called the alumni number to hear Al King's recording of game highlights, which are available approximately one hour after each game. We think this service is of particular interest to our alumni who live in areas where the information is not available through the local newspaper, but it is also a convenience for anyone who doesn't want to wait for sports news on radio or television. The local number for the alumni office (and the sports hot line) is 357-7942.

In this issue of IUP Magazine, you will see advertisements for two national moving corporations. The alumni office has negotiated with north American and Allied to provide interstate moving services at greatly discounted prices. No matter where you live, call the 800 number listed for the company of your choice and you will be provided with features such as paying for moving costs with your personal check (rather than having to have a certified check at the time your furniture is delivered) in addition to the discount.

If you are wondering why we are providing these unique services, it is because we want you to benefit from your IUP experience, which is a relationship that spans a lifetime, rather than the few years you happened to attend classes. You are the "product" for which IUP gains international recognition, and you are important to us. If we can help you by arranging for services available only to large groups, then we see this as a win-win situation. And, quite frankly, we hope that you will continue to support your alma mater financially, because your gift to IUP provides us with the margin of excellence that has resulted in our latest recognition—this time by Money magazine (see the president's message in the feature section). You can be extremely proud that you are an alumnus or alumna of IUP.

Steelmakers

by Al King

When it comes to football factories, IUP has never been mentioned in the same breath with Oklahoma and Alabama. Those schools are into volume, while smaller schools, Division II institutions like IUP, are more like the old mom-and-pop grocery stores. While it's true that corner groceries didn't have all the fixings of today's supermarkets, they did produce some pretty good buys on a smaller scale.

That's the case with the IUP football program. IUP isn't a pipeline to professional football, but what the Indians have sent to the NFL has been Grade A stock. A good example is IUP's connection with the Pittsburgh Steelers. Two IUP graduates are working in the Pittsburgh front office, and the newest member of the coaching staff is an IUP graduate and, until this year, a coach at IUP.

Tom Donahoe '69 is the Steelers' director of pro personnel and development. Tom Modrak '65 is the club's college scouting coordinator. Jack Henry '69 joined the Steelers in August and is an offensive line coach. He spent the past four years as IUP's offensive coordinator and associate head coach.

Apparently, an IUP background has served the trio well. Last year was the first for Donahoe and Modrak in their current positions, and the Steelers enjoyed their finest season in five years, going 9-7 and advancing to the AFC championship game.

In addition to sharing the same alma mater, the three share other traits—traits that have a lot to do with their success.

First, all three have backgrounds in education. Don't laugh. That's a major consideration with the Steelers. Steelers Head Coach Chuck Noll earned an undergraduate degree in education at the University of Dayton in 1953. His theory is that all coaches are teachers. They have to be, or they can't communicate the game of football. Henry's abilities to teach and communicate were big reasons the Steelers hired him.

Henry and Donahoe earned education degrees; Modrak's undergraduate degree is in geology. While that seems a bit out of the ordinary for a football executive, it may have been the perfect preparation for him.

Modrak spent a great deal of time digging, learning as much as he could about football. This is his twelfth year with the Steelers. He joined the organization full-time in 1979 as a pro talent scout and held that position for eight years before serving two years as director of pro scouting. He worked with the professional scouting combine, BLESTO, for six months prior to joining the organization.

Henry and Donahoe have similar backgrounds.

Henry has coached football since 1969. Pittsburgh is his thirteenth stop on the coaching carousel. Donahoe was a teacher and high school coach for sixteen years at Seton-LaSalle High School before becoming a Steelers scout in 1986.

The point is, none of the three was an overnight success. They paid their dues and kept plugging when lesser men might have thrown in the towel. Every success and failure was viewed as a learning experience and stored for future reference.

Maybe the three got breaks by not taking breaks. Modrak believes this, more than anything, is what he learned from his college coach, Chuck Klausing: "I think Chuck had a great work ethic, and I hope some of that rubbed off. He had a great deal of determination. His whole week revolved around winning on Saturday."

Now, for Donahoe, Modrak, and Henry, the whole week revolves around winning on Sunday. Donahoe is responsible for scouting opposing teams, players, and free-agent signings and is the organization's liaison to the league office and other teams on player personnel matters.

Modrak is involved in overseeing the scouting and evaluation of players in the college talent pool. Henry's job is to help develop that talent once it comes to Pittsburgh.

Will the three be successful in bringing another NFL championship to Pittsburgh? Success is another trait they share. Modrak was an excellent player at IUP, a linebacker on the All-Sixties All-Star Team. Donahoe won back-to-back WPIAL football championships during his high school coaching career. Henry was a key member of IUP's 1968 Boardwalk Bowl team and, as a coach, he has directed offenses that have ranked among the leaders in the country.

"I got a great foundation at IUP," Modrak said. "I got a great education, I was in a good football program, and I was involved with good people."

And today, when the three need more good people, one of the places they look is IUP. 🐾

A regular contributor to IUP Magazine, Al King is interim associate director of the IUP Office of Sports Information.
